

WHAT WAS I MADE FOR?

Week 2

When was the last time you were influenced to buy something you didn't really need?

Fill in the blank as many ways as you can: "Most high schoolers think if they just had _____, their life would be so much better."

In your own words, how would you describe what it means to be "discontent"?

How might linking our identity to what we have or don't have cause discontentment?

What might change for you if you looked to God to define what was real and authentic about you?

Whenever you find yourself wanting something new, how can you consider what might be motivating that desire?

What's one step you can take to move toward appreciating how God made you?

Leader note: Challenge your students to take a spending break. Try doing it for one day (or more if you're up to the challenge!). Avoid any spending on stuff you don't necessarily need. That morning latte, the latest sneakers, the new sweater, literally anything from Amazon—whatever it is you desire, attempt to avoid making the purchase for a designated time. Let it challenge you to consider your own motivations when it comes to your stuff.
